2 Claims

Claim 1: Kairos affects one's experience of belonging or not belonging in a space based on different contexts taking place at the time of observance in a space.

Claim 2: The identity a space creates for those who experience it creates or destroys one's sense of belonging in it by displaying who has been in the building and what others currently in it are also doing.

These claims matter as understanding what the rhetor wants people to experience from a space and how they use rhetoric, like ethos to do it, allows you to understand the world around you. Kairos then explains how sometimes the experience we get from spaces isn't always intended and how to look past this to see the rhetor's original intention.
